

I would like to add my voice in support of extending and simplifying access to low-power broadcasting. Unlike Representative Tauzin, I do not believe that the FCC's primary mission is to protect the commercial use of the RF spectrum, but instead to insure that it used in way which benefits the American public to the greatest degree possible. Low-power FM broadcasting has been important to many schools, colleges, and universities, as well as various religious and secular groups. Properly regulated, it poses no threat of interference with high-powered transmitters used commercially. Thank you very much, Tobias Boyd.
