

It is about time you began to license low power FM stations. The airwaves are generally dominated by large broadcasting corporations who seek only to make a profit, and not to serve the community. As a result, radio in Los Angeles is a wasteland, consisting mostly of advertising and multiple stations with identical formats. Santa Monica's only private radio station was sold last year to giant Jacor Communications, and they immediately changed the station's format to match one of their other stations. Please return the airwaves to the people who own them-the citizens of the United States-and let us serve our communities by diversifying the monopoly controlled airwaves.
