

I support the Local FM Radio proposal as it maintains people's control over the public domain of the airwaves in some minor semblance of a manner.

You should well consider relaxing the obligations of a local community broadcaster as they do not have the resources to "compete". This results in an oligopolistic content marketplace which is what the FCC has proposed they are committed to avoiding.

Additionally, with the advent of the Internet, more eyes will be on the current methods of communication such as radio broadcasting, and cases may be built on high entry barriers associated with radio broadcasting to further proposals on keeping regulation on the Internet low. The nation's eye will be on our failures in the past to direct future growth.

thank you for your time,
