

In the matter of your proposed low-power radio rule making: 1,000 watts is too much, 100 or less would allow more stations. Only one station per owner, the owner must live in the community, no commercials or underwriting, no secondary status for low power stations. They should have first choice of airwaves over big corporate stations. No auctions, what kind of free speech is that? All digital and iboc technology should be open to micro stations too. Why not open more spectrum space strictly for lowpower radio? And don't outlaw the pirates, without them you wouldn't be doing this at all. Frankly I think you should toss everyone off the dial and start over, with first choice of spectrum space given to community stations and the megacorporations can duke it out for the leftovers. Once people have another choice no one will listen to all those commercials anyway. Never mind the NAB, stand up for the people's rights, it's your job, isn't it?
