

Dear Commissioners:

Please do everything in your power to create the LPFM Radio Service. In this day of mega-media mergers and buyouts, the voice of the rightful owner of the airwaves (the public) has been completely lost. No longer is radio a tool of the community. It has been relegated to tool of the conglomerate and it's advertisers. Make the medium more democratic and community responsive -- create LPFM now. This has been too long coming and attempts to stall it should be soundly denied.

On the topic of stalling: the NAB apparently desires to delay this issue yet again (no surprise, they've stalled every step of the way) on the grounds that they need further time for their "study." Hasn't the study already been done long ago? Aren't translator signals a low-power radio source? Indeed, they are. The only difference is that those signals would now be originating content instead of merely repeating it.

Do the right thing. Level the playing field a bit. Make LPFM a shining new reality.

Sincerely,
Jeremy Wilker
