

There are a number of fine quality radio programs that are far superior to the programs offered on the local, commercial, "public", and educational institution radio stations, here in South Florida. Unfortunately, these radio programs are unlicensed and subject to being shut down by the FCC. This community is a diverse one and many of the community's sub-communities experience cohesion and present a "voice" via micro-transmission. Reformed regulation is a welcome method of allowing these under-funded radio programs to exist. The community at large benefits from hearing the voices of sub-communities that go largely unheard. Thank you for your consideration.
