

Dear FCC, It would seem obvious from listening to the radio within the last 10 years, that radio and the production of music is being too dominated by owners and producers. Far too many stations are owned by the same people. Likewise, any diversity in programming is being drowned by major companies. That's why we need new outlets in the radio spectrum. It's obvious the internet is seeing its share of diversity of programming, however until every car and home is hooked to the internet, radio will continue to flourish.

greg szekeres