

I would like to voice my support of the proposal for low power radio stations. Our college was stymied in getting a radio station for a variety of reasons mostly having to do with the cost and difficulty of obtaining a full power radio station license. I think the current proposal, if implemented at that time, would have helped us to obtain a campus wide radio station at a price we could afford. The advantages should be clear. At a time when the internet is rapidly dominating as the forum for communication, I feel the FCC should do more to promote radio as an alternative before it becomes completely obsolete.
