

I wholeheartedly support the licensing of low power FM radio stations. In my market, the few radio stations worth listening to are all either public broadcasting or AM. The vast majority of FM stations in this market are bastions of mediocrity, and that's being kind. The airwaves in this nation have become a wasteland where the same boring, pre-packaged "product" is played on every station in every market. Certainly, there is a place for that, but not at the expense of all other possibilities. Low power FM radio licenses will mean a resurgence of interesting, local radio and bring some balance back to radio.
