

For the longest time, the right to communicate over public airwaves has been limited to the rich. Any private citizen who wished to express his opinions or increase awareness of local issues to a reasonable audience was simply out of luck. But with the proposed LPFM license, many of these issues are corrected. Not only are people allowed to express themselves artistically, these local radio stations bring to their area an increased sense of community. This would also be beneficial to the government. With this proposal there would neither be need nor sympathy for "pirate" radio stations, making regulation and monitoring infinitely easier. LPFM is, to put it simply, the right thing to do.
