

Large Corporations like Disney control a Huge portion of the Information that Americans receive through the Local News, National News, print, radio, TV... Freedom of Speech is getting more and more expensive. By opening up FM Frequencies to the general public, the FCC would be doing what it should: Allowing the Public's Voice to be heard.

Sure, anyone with a fast enough connection can setup their own Radio-Free broadcast. But connections like that are expensive. As it stands, the Legacy Technologies like FM Radio have never been able to catch up to this kind of freedom. Expensive Licences keep Joe Average from broadcasting his voice thru his neighborhood.

LPFM Licencing is, in short, too good an idea that it can't possibly have come from the FCC. Besides, you still have a lot of hell to take from me over becoming Big Broadcasters' bitch during the HDTV Swindling.
