

As a lover of music and a believer in American Freedom, I feel that low power FM licenses are a wonderful idea that will allow a larger group of the populace to share and expose others to ideas in both music and thought. This new type of license will allow lesser known genres of music, such as ragtime and novelty piano, experimental jazz, electronic, and 20th century composition to have a voice in the community. It will allow for wide ranging debate on various social and political issues, sports broadcasts for club and high school teams, and an outlet for members of local communities to voice opinions and ideas. The new licenses will reduce pirate broadcasts by giving hobbyists a legal and affordable manner to enjoy community broadcast. This proposal is good for communities, good for music, and good for America. I strongly encourage the creation of low power FM licenses.
