

As a private citizen and entrepreneur living in San Francisco,
I would like to comment in favor of low power fm radio.

San Francisco is the home of one of the most exciting and innovative electronic music scenes in the United States. With a large number of musicians and fans, this city produces music that is sought after and appreciated throughout the world. Yet almost none of this music can be found on local airwaves. Large commercial radio stations playing generic pop music dominate the frequencies, to the extent that this genre of music gets airtime it is limited to a few big name acts from England.

I am eager to see this locally produced music played in this locale. The fan-base is there to support it. I myself am an investor in a nightclub specializing in this music and I see the people come out every night to hear it. They listen to their local musicians, but can only hear them live in local clubs. While going to a club and hearing the live set is a wonderful experience, I don't see why I can't also hear that same music driving to work in the morning or on the radio at the local shops. I look forward to the day that I can set up a local radio station at my nightclub and broadcast the music made and played in my community to the people who live in my community.

Thank you for your attention.
