

As a former management member of non-commercial radio, and a current listener of same, I strongly urge the FCC to prioritize its mandate to public service, and provide significant opportunities for low power radio (LPRM). From a musical AND public affairs standpoint, the centralization of frequency control has resulted in a loss of free-market environment, stifling independent and creative thought for lack of airtime. In this manner are the choices for the public severely restricted. Please serve the public at large, not those individual entities who claim to represent masses of people-- those who may tune in only because there's simply nothing else. Thank you.
