I am in support of the FCC changing their regulations of RM radio broadcasting.

It is important to the community to have access to local low-power radio stations. These radio stations bring communities together by reporting news, neighborhood events, and representing the community with its own particular style and music.

With the current regulations, it is nearly impossible to get a license to broadcast. This hinders the small community broadcasters of obtaining a license with the larger corporations controlling the airwaves. It conforms people into what they hear on the radio.

By allowing new regulations, more people can get more information about what is going on in their community.

Thank you.

Sincerely

Kevin Guill
