

LPFM is a very controversial issue that has many different one-sided arguments. I personally believe that LPFM would be great for rural communities who would like to have access to radio station frequencies. The creation of an LPFM station would be a low-cost solution to those living in those areas. It would also be a very beneficial way of starting out with owning a station while gaining knowledge and experience. But even good things have downsides. LPFM would cause interference problems in areas where there are greater amounts of stations. LPFM will also cause problems in emergency broadcast systems and in the future of digital radio. There are too many open issues on how LPFM will interfere where existing frequencies cover, and I think that the issues attached to the creation of LPFM should be thought over more before deciding to take a vote.
