

I'm submitting a comment in favor of this NPRM. In large urban areas commercial stations are mostly owned by corporations located in other communities. In turn, programming is generated by these large corporations at remote locations that aren't conscious of the local community's interests, and programming tastes. Furthermore, commercial stations should be taxed a small amount to underwrite the costs of low powered stations.