

It is very frustrating to be locked into a contract with Cellular One, when I can only use the phone and their service half of the time. It doesn't do much good to have a wireless phone when living in a rural area, for emergencies and such when you can't depend on the service. What really puzzles me, is the fact that Cellular One says that they are giving us the amount of service required by the FCC. I am now with Verizon, and I have not had one dropped call in the 3 weeks that I have had their service. I am trying to get out of the contract with Cellular One, as they did not hold up their end of the contract, by providing me with service. Service to me means being able to use the phone when and where I want to. Not half of the time.
