

We have "community access" TV channels (on cable only), how about "community access" radio station time too? A common (city govt. installed radio station) that citizens can make material (speech, music, etc) and send a MP3 file to the station web site, which then schedules it to be aired in the future. Of course it would need to be verified for good, clean, legal content first. Using some of the radio spectrum by and for the people which I can tune in on my AM radio in my car or small radio headphones would be great. Not owned or operated by some monopolistic cable company or the growing media giants your "deregulation of ownership laws" have created....
