

Regarding: Easing restrictions of FCC's media rules

As a nation, the interests of profitability and economic survival are in the interests of every American. Some may think that the Easing of restrictions may benefit big business. After all, it is the easing of restrictions that has created the tendency and movement for corporate conglomerates to become larger and larger, and although they may think this is in their best interests in the short term, in the long term it will hurt them. As a nation, we are putting all our eggs in too few many baskets and that is a risky proposition considering that is not what this country was built on. Easing restrictions of FCC media rules is a bad idea because it does not represent the opinion of the majority of Americans and they are beginning to realize that their voice is becoming increasingly smaller. The patience of the American people is growing thin, but taking a stand on this issue by the representatives of the American people, the lawmakers, will bring some trust and respect back in Washington. Diversity is what helps make this country wealthy and wealth and capitalism are the entities which the corporations need for their survival. The passing of this rule will hurt them in the long run because American people will begin to realize that no matter what channel they turn to, the same information, same point of view, and same interests are being said, and it is not American nature to go along with that for a long period of time. There will eventually be resentment, and resentment is not good for business.
