

I am very uncomfortable with the use of power line distribution to provide any form of wideband service. The technology to prevent interference to other mediums of communications has not been fully developed and I suspect very little oversight to reduce interference will exist. Cable TV is a good example...leaky systems are very seldom willingly policed by their owners unless the FCC is asked to step in.