

BPL, sounds like a great idea, especially for those without DSL available.

But thousands of radiators, connected by an excellent antenna system would spell the end of short wave communications. Part 15 was written before anything like BPL was conceived. This will have a great impact on licensed services like amateur radio.

Wasn't BPL rejected by Japan and several European countries? Why would anyone think it would work here if it won't work elsewhere?