

I find it hard to believe that given the track record of power companies dealing with interference problems in the past, that it is even being considered to use the existing power grid to pass high speed data. There are several alternatives to do the same thing that have far less potential for interference to the consumer and they are all more reliable. Please DO NOT allow this issue to go any further.

Danny R Pease NG9R