

I do not think that the communications industry needs another "broadband internet" provider. There are a sufficient number of choices available. Additionally, the potential for interference to other HF services pose a real threat and would be disastrous in times of any emergency where HF communications are needed.