

You don't need a meeting to realize that the idea of copy-protecting HDTV is bad for consumers and will slow consumers' adoption of HDTV.

Under this plan, consumers will not be able to tape their favorite TV shows for later viewing. This will lead to lower viewership for many shows and lower advertising revenues for networks. I believe that the network's concerns are completely misguided. I also believe that the "broadcast" flag is meant for other purposes, such as pay-per-view of the public airways, as apposed to protecting their Intellectual Property.
