

Whatever FCC can do to promote greater choices for consumers should be a top priority.

It has always amazed how PCs have increased in power and performance while costs have come down because of competition. On the other hand internet service providers costs show little change. I live in a captive market where Time Warner controls cable Broadband access via cable TV. Their franchise for cable TV should not be allowed to extend to internet broadband services without some fair competition from BPL.