

We need competition for the various service connections into the home and the most troublesome is the "last mile" interface. It seems that there are various technologies that could compete but the 3 that have the immediate bandwidth to handle voice, data and video are cable, power line, and satellite. The FCC needs to free all restrictions to allow all these technologies and the phone companies to compete equally.