

BPL is a very bad idea. Troubleshooting interference problems would be very difficult and result in numerous FCC complaints. I've already had significant problems in getting my local power company to clean-up unwanted telemetry signals coming into my house on the power line. Today they just pretend it's not them unless I can prove otherwise. Power companies should stick to what they do best and leave the communications to those who know it well.