

This should be championed as a technology that could help drive down broadband prices by providing a third broadband choice for U.S. residents, beyond cable modem and DSL service.

Because of the near ubiquity of power lines, BPL could also bring broadband services to rural areas that may not have other broadband options.