

While I am all in favor of high speed internet access in rural areas (I have only a very slow and unreliable dial-up available here), I am VERY concerned over potential interference issues. Does the FCC have the staff to investigate and resolve every complaint of interference from (or to) a BPL system? If not, can you guarantee that funding will be made available for additional staff. The interference issue would seem to outweigh any possible advantages of BPL.