

First and foremost: The BPL providers stand to make a TON of revenue...DO YOU HEAR ME????..A TON OF REVENUE!!!!

Therefore, BPL needs to be regulated and the providers need to cover the initial, as well as ongoing costs required to provide their services without impact to existing radio services - because THEY CAN AFFORD IT!!!!

These services are not only "here first", but have been instrumental and invaluable in the development of wireless communications as we know them today . To "snuff" them out is to "snuff" yourself out. These services made the FCC what it is today...you know it, I know, "they" know it.

There is no replacement for the Amateur Radio Service that exists today. It is but a lone endeavor, which, although gracefully aging, still provides (and always will) much education, opportunity and entertainment to the world communities at large, and should, therefore, neither be made to bear the burden of commercialization without due process, and without the providers bearing all costs associated with it's startup and continuance, nor give up any of its existing privileges.

Hopefully, you can hear the plea of thousands through my message. I dino't want to loose this resource as teacher for my children and a utility in times of need.

Jim Mackenzie KC2MYP, maybe W2JEM, if all goes well.
