

The corruption of data which HF digital signals could undergo on high voltage powerlines is greatly underestimated. In Western Washington State rain or even a thick fog can cause the powerlines to buzz and pop. BPL has the potential to cause great interference with amateur radio and government agencies such as DOD, FEMA and even the intelligence community. Ignoring the failed attempts at BPL in other countries while putting our country at risk is not prudent.